August 4, 1990, the Aspen Lodge at Camp David. On Saturday, August 4, 1990, President Bush and his nation's top policy makers gathered at the Aspen Lodge at Camp David, the presidential retreat. Sitting in his shirt sleeves at the broad conference table in the rustic, pine-paneled conference room, President Bush was flanked by Vice-President Dan Quayle, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, White House Chief of Staff John Sununu, Secretary of State James Baker, William Webster of the C.I.A., National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft and his assistant for the Middle East, Richard Haas. Finally the military men who would be called on to carry out the President's policy were in attendance – General Colin Powell and General H. Norman Schwarzkopf. Long discussions took place and in the end, it was decided to go ahead with plans for the rapid U.S. deployment of troops into Saudi Arabia, with the hope that King Faud of Saudi Arabia could soon be brought around. Powell rushed back to the Pentagon, ready to alert the necessary forces. Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Norman Schwarzkopf would depart to Jidda, Saudi Arabia, to force Faud's hand.
