

#1386 America as Media-Persia and the Building of Israel – U.S. Secretary of State James Baker explained in his book, The Politics of Diplomacy, the interrelationship between (i) the defeat of Saddam Hussein’s Iraq in the 1991 Gulf War and (ii) the restarting of the Middle East peace process (continued)

Key Understanding: U.S. Secretary of State Jim Baker’s convening of the 1991 Middle East peace conference in Madrid, Spain, (i) was a direct result of the 1991 Gulf War and (ii) was a steppingstone toward the September 13, 1993, accord between Yassir Arafat’s PLO and Yitzhak Rabin’s Israel, each a part of the latter day(s) (counterfeit) fulfillment of Isaiah 44:28.

Following is another excerpt from Jim Baker’s book, The Politics of Diplomacy: Revolution, War and Peace, 1989-1992, explaining that the defeat of Saddam Hussein’s Iraq in the 1991 Gulf War led to the restarting of the Middle East peace process:

“There was little doubt that the environment in the region had been drastically altered. It was also apparent that the entire world suddenly wanted to get closer to the United States. The Soviet Empire was gone. The principles and values of the American experience – democracy and free markets – were being embraced around the globe as never before. It seemed as though everyone wanted to be America’s best friend. Although we didn’t do a good job of explaining the concept, this worldwide advance of democratic ideals represented what we really meant by the phrase ‘New World Order’ – not the absence of regional conflicts, as most interpreted it. Our status as the last remaining superpower had been enhanced by the war. We had tremendous strength and credibility around the world, and stood at the zenith of our influence in the Middle East. I believed it was time to seize the moment. If we hesitated [in attempting to bring accord to the Middle East], we would lose an historic opportunity.” (p. 414-415, The Politics of Diplomacy: Revolution, War and Peace, 1989-1992)
