Gutzon Borglum. Gutzon Borglum was the American sculptor who created the Mount Rushmore National Memorial to honor four presidents – George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln, and Theodore Roosevelt. Borglum was born of Danish parents on March 25, 1867, in Bear Lake, Idaho. He studied art in San Francisco and at the Academie Julian in Paris. He was influenced by the vigorous modeling of French sculptor Auguste Rodin. In 1901, after success in England, Borglum settled in New York City. In 1904, his Mares of Diomedes, a dramatic bronze sculpture of stampeding horses, won a gold medal at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition in St. Louis. In 1916, Borglum was commissioned to carve the huge memorial to the Confederate Army into Stone Mountain in Georgia. Disputes with his sponsors led to Borglum’s dismissal before the project was completed. He realized his ambition of creating a gigantic sculpture from a mountain with the Mount Rushmore memorial, which he began in 1927. He worked on the project until his death on March 6, 1941. His son, Lincoln Borglum, who worked with him, completed the project later that same year.

Key Understanding: Gutzon Borglum died 2 months after the January 6, 1941, birth of Roosevelt’s Four Freedoms. The Lord designed the death of Gutzon Borglum, creator of the Mount Rushmore National Memorial to the Four Presidents, to occur on March 6, 1941, exactly 2 months after the January 6, 1941, birth of the Four Freedoms, for the purpose of linking the Four Freedoms with the Shrine of Democracy of the Four Presidents.
