Thatcher urges Bush to be “Churchillian” regarding Saddam Hussein. On August 2, 1990, U.S. President George H. W. Bush and British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher were in Aspen, Colorado, to speak at the Aspen Institute. Saddam Hussein had freshly invaded Kuwait. [Note: It is widely known and regarded as fact that at Aspen, Thatcher urged Bush to be “Churchillian” toward Saddam Hussein. The British proudly refer to it as a stiffening-of-the-spine “backbone transplant” given to Bush by Thatcher. One source writes, “So now, goaded by Thatcher to adopt a Churchillian stance, Bush abruptly changed direction. That afternoon he condemned Iraq’s ‘naked aggression.’ He would soon take to comparing Saddam Hussein . . . to Adolf Hitler.”]

Why Saddam Hussein was compared to Hitler. In the mind of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, the invasion of Kuwait by Saddam Hussein’s Iraq in early August 1990 could be likened to the Czech-German crisis of 1938-1939 when Nazi Germany marched into the ceded Czech territory of the Sudetenland and then later invaded the unceded remainder of the nation. While British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain had worked to appease Hitler by encouraging the Czechs to give the Sudetenland to Nazi Germany, Winston Churchill stood against appeasement of the dictator. With Churchill’s stance against appeasing Hitler over Czechoslovakia as the background, Thatcher encouraged President Bush to be Churchillian in the similar situation of Saddam Hussein-led Iraq’s invasion of Kuwait.

Key Understanding #1: Because Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher’s urging of President George H. W. Bush to be Churchillian against Saddam Hussein surrounded the September 21, 1938, agreement by the Czechs to cede the Sudetenland to Nazi Germany, and because that event was prophetically symbolized by the September 21, 1938, ‘Churchillian’ Great New England Hurricane, we can now call the hurricane the ‘Thatcher-Churchillian’ Great New England Hurricane of September 21, 1938.

Key Understanding #2: In fact, the entire episode at Aspen, Colorado, on August 2, 1990, of Thatcher urging Bush to be Churchillian was for the prophetic purpose of further linking the ‘Thatcher’ Great Colonial Hurricane of August 15, 1635, with the ‘Thatcher’ Great New England Hurricane of September 21, 1938.

27 AND THE RAIN DESCENDED, AND THE FLOODS CAME, AND THE WINDS BLEW, AND BEAT UPON THAT HOUSE; AND IT FELL: and GREAT WAS THE FALL OF IT.
