

#2204 The Yom Kippur War and the Abomination of Desolation – The post-World War II U.S. waxing great toward the South and toward the East as a second Syria/Antiochus IV Epiphanes, part 463, The Pale Horse, (ix), The Pale Horse Rider Assassins: Ferdinand and Sophie die

Ferdinand and Sophie die. Franz Ferdinand continued to sit upright. Here is what Count Harrach, who was on the running board of the car, said of the next events:

As the car quickly reversed a thin stream of blood spurted out of His Imperial Highness's mouth on to my right cheek. With one hand I got out my handkerchief to wipe the blood from the Archduke's face, and as I did so Her Highness called out, "In God's name what has happened to you?" Then she collapsed, her face between the Archduke's knees. I had no idea that she was hit and thought she had fainted from fear. His Imperial Highness then said "Sopher! Sopher! Don't die! Live for my children." I took hold of the collar of his tunic in order to prevent his head sinking forward and asked him, "Is Your Imperial Highness in great pain?" He answered distinctly "It is nothing." Then he turned his face a little to one side and said six or seven times, more faintly as he began to lose consciousness, "It is nothing." There was a very brief pause, then the bleeding made him choke violently, but this stopped when we reached the Konak.

On arrival at the Konak (the governor's residence) Sophie was found to be dead; Franz Ferdinand died a few minutes later. At 11:15, as the interrogation of Princip – battered and sick from the cyanide he had swallowed which had failed to kill him, but without a trace of remorse – began, the death knell of his victim, the heir to the Habsburg throne, tolled out over Sarajevo.
